- Explore the Falkland, South Georgia, Antarctic Peninsula
- Shorter trips to the Antarctica Peninsula
- Active cruises include diving, camping, kayaking, snow shoeing
- See Emperor Penguins in the Weddell Sea with helicopters
- Cruise on comfortable, ice-strengthened expedition class ships outfitted with zodiacs
- See massive tabular icebergs and glaciers
- Enormous colonies of nesting penguins, albatross, seabirds, seals and whales
- Walk in the footsteps of Shackelton
- Stunning surreal scenery

Salisbury Plain, South Georgia: Randy Green

Long before the Russian explorer Fabian von Bellingshausen crossed the Antarctic Circle in 1820 and became the first person to sight Antarctica, scholars had been trying to prove the existence of a southern continent. The ancient Greeks had developed a theory of a frigid northern landmass (Arktos) and hypothesized that this region must be counterbalanced by a frigid southern continent (Antarktos). The imaginary southern polar region was soon labelled 'Terra Incognita' and this conception led to a continued eagerness to discover the unknown continent. When, eventually, mankind had survived the stormy southern seas and found a way through the supposed impenetrable pack-ice, human eyes were finally able to register what the Greek master Aristotle had suspected more than twenty centuries before.

A visit to Antarctica unites one with the magical elements of polar wilderness -- a place that truly dwells apart from our human-created world. And departing Antarctica leaves us temporarily confused, as it is hard to imagine that we have truly witnessed the profusion of life, colors and crystalline purity of this fascinating region. Antarctica evokes a longing to return, time after time, and the realization that not much has really changed since scholars started to philosophize and the early adventurers made the first tentative explorations of this continent.

Our ships are hand selected for your safety and comfort, with capacities ranging from 100 to 120 passengers. They include the Plancius, Ortelius, Expedition and Island Sky.

Antarctic Destinations

Below are the major destinations along the route of the various ships' itineraries we offer. Please refer to them when choosing your itinerary. Not all departures may visit all of the locations listed.

Falkland Islands (Malvinas)

The Falkland Islands, or Malvinas, as they are known to the Argentinians, give the overwhelming impression of a slice of Britain, despite the long-simmering dispute with Argentina over their sovereignty. Little Port Stanley with its brightly-painted houses with impeccable English gardens, seem just a skip and a jump from merry old England.

Stanley is also noted for its large number of stranded three and four-masted clippers, whalers and freighters from the golden age of sail in the shallow harbor. These extremely well-preserved (due to the cold climate) vessels from the 19th Century, some with their rigging and masts still intact, constitute a virtual 'accidental sailing museum', one of the world's most unique!

The Falklands are also known for their healthy populations of sub-Antarctic wildlife species. Our trips will visit the fascinating western part of the archipelago, where we can expect to find black-browed albatross, rockhopper penguins and blue-eyed shags (cormorants) on New Island. On Carcass Island, we can view two more penguin species, the Magellanic and gentoo, along with night herons and waterfowl such as steamer ducks.

Of course, in any of the inlets and channels we have a good chance to see whales, such as orcas and humpbacks.

South Georgia Island

Approximately two days sailing southeast from the Falklands lies the hauntingly beautiful South Georgia Island. Long a bustling center for whalers, it was largely abandoned by 1964 except for a few research facilities. The main whaling station of Grytviken is still largely intact and the huge wooden flensing dock still reeks of rancid whale oil. A whaling museum has been established at the whaling station.

The beaches are now abandoned to a few king penguins and huge elephant seals hauled up on the shore. A short hike will take us to the grave of one of the 20th Century's greatest explorers, Sir Ernest Shackleton.

In 1916, in what has become one of modern history's greatest heroic stories, Shackleton's Antarctic expedition became stranded when their ship, the Endurance, was crushed in ice. Shackleton and five others left 22 others on Elephant Island, some 800 miles to the west, and traveled in a small lifeboat to South Georgia, where, exhausted, they hiked 22 miles over rugged mountains to the little whaling station of Stromness. He then directed the rescue of his remaining party at Elephant Island. Not a man was lost in this harrowing adventure.

South Georgia is also home to some spectacular bird species, such as the wandering albatross, which has the largest wingspan of any bird (more than 10 feet). Conditions permitting, we'll land on Prion Island to observe their fascinating nesting and courtship behavior.

We'll also visit Salisbury Plain where more than 200,000 king penguins raise their chicks. We may also visit Elsehul, Right Whale Bay, Possession Bay, Gold Harbor and Drygalski Fjord to give you a good opportunity to see a wide spectrum of landscapes and wildlife, like the introduced reindeer, plus fur seals, elephant seals, gentoo and macaroni penguins, grey-headed albatrosses, light-mantled sooty albatrosses, northern and southern giant petrels, several species of prions and storm petrels, brown skuas, Dominican gulls, Antarctic terns, sheathbills and the endemic South Georgia pintail.

South Orkney Islands

Further to the southwest of South Georgia and closer to the Antarctic Circle, lies the South Orkney Islands. The islands were discovered in 1821, and though they were declared British territory in 1908, under the 1959 Antarctic Treaty sovereignty is neither recognized nor disputed and therefore may be used by any nation for peaceful purposes.

Depending on the voyage, we can visit Coronation and Laurie Islands. Of interest are the possibility of seeing nesting giant petrels, Adelle penguin colonies as well as snow and cape petrels.

Elephant Island

Elephant Island is known primarily as the overwintering location of the stranded Shackleton Antarctic Expedition of 1916. It was here that 22 of Shackleton's men miraculously weathered the winter while he sought help at South Georgia, some 800 miles distant. Weather permitting, we'll be able to stand on the very rocky shore where the encampment was. We can expect to see a small colony of chinstrap penguins here also.

The Antarctic Peninsula

The peninsula encompasses a large number of islands, straits and inlets and we'll explore many of them, weather conditions permitting. Below are just some of the possible targets and their features.

Paulet Island: Preserved by the cold climate, remains of several early 20th Century expeditions dot the island, such as the Nordenskiöld Expedition, and we'll find a colony of hundreds of thousands of Adelle penguins here also.

Trinity Island: View thousands of gentoo penguins and Weddell and fur seals hauled out on the beach.

King George Island: Home to several research stations, and if time and the stations' schedules permit, we will visit some for a look at the scientists' activities.

Deception Island: Carefully navigating our ship through the impossibly narrow channel of Neptune's Bellows, we'll anchor in an ancient caldera where volcanic activity warms the water enough for a swim! Explore old whaling installations and abandoned boats, along with cliffs with petrel nests.

Cuerville Island: a small precipitous island, nestled between the mountains of the Antarctic Peninsula. It contains a large colony of gentoo penguins and breeding pairs of brown skuas.

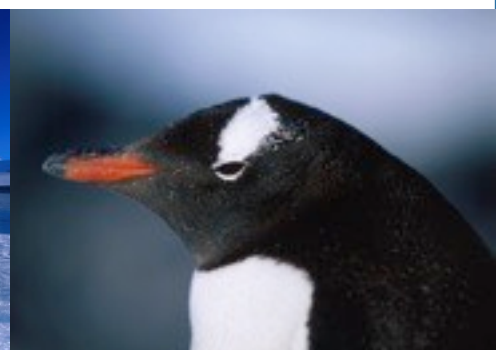

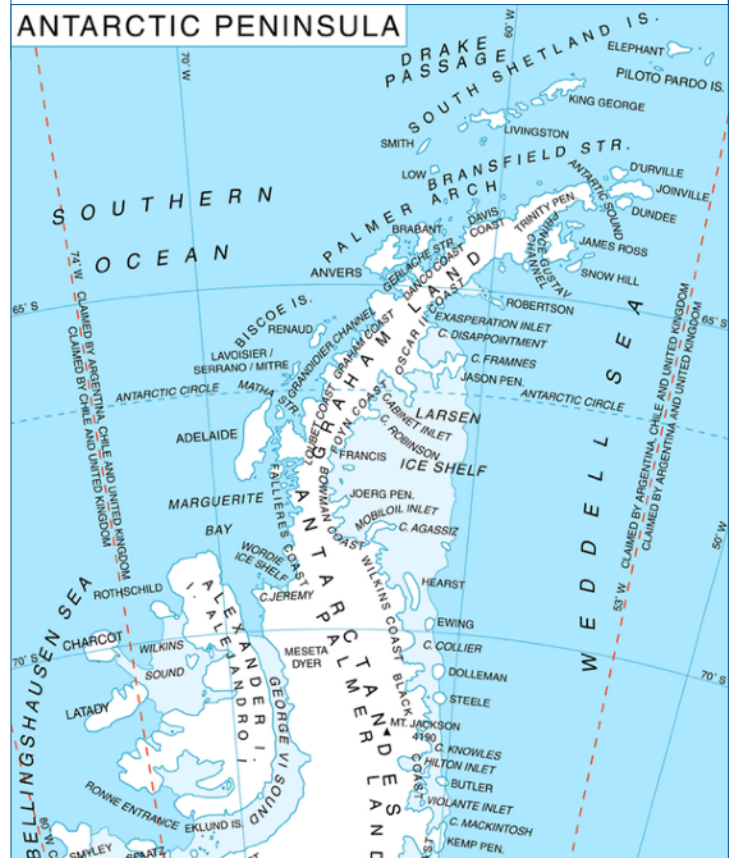

Charlotte Bay: A chance to set foot on the Antarctic Peninsula itself as well as observe crabeater seals.

Hannah Point: One of the best wildlife spots in the area. it is great for viewing giant petrels, cape pigeons, blue-eyed shags, gentoo, chinstrap and possibly macaroni penguins, plus elephant seals.

Paradise Bay: Home to colonies of thousands of chinstrap and gentoo penguins.

Gerlach Straits, Lemaire, Neumeyer, Errata Channels: Some of the most spectacular scenery on your voyage can be viewed here. Precipitous mountains and massive tidewater glaciers line the shore and enormous icebergs dot the channels.

At Sea: While sailing between our land destinations, your time will be spent attending fascinating lectures by our top expedition staff and speakers. On deck, you'll want to be ever-vigilant for a wide variety of whale species: orca, humpback, minke and possibly a blue whale. Seabirds follow our ship and will keep your binoculars busy: MacCormick skua, snow, giant, white-chinned and storm petrels and the elusive juvenile emperor penguins.

Ship Sample Itinerary

All itineraries are for guidance only. Programs may vary depending on local ice and weather conditions and in order to take advantage of opportunities to see wildlife. Flexibility is paramount for expedition cruises.

We offer three types of Antarctica cruise itineraries:

- Peninsula, Falklands, and South Georgia Island
- Antarctic Peninsula
- Basecamp Adventures

Please consult our web site for each ship's detailed itineraries.

Titles are links to each program's offerings.

Sample Itinerary

Day 1: Embark vessel in Ushuaia

Day 2-3 At sea enroute to Antarctica Peninsula

Day 4-9: We will sail directly to "High Antarctica", passing the Melchior islands and the Schollaert Channel between Brabant and Anvers Island, continuing on to the Neumayer Channel, where we position our ship for the multi activity base camp. Plan to stay two overnights at anchor in order to implement two camp nights and two full activity days. Sail through the spectacular Lemaire Channel to Booth Island, Pléneau and Petermann Island where we can find Adélie penguins, blue eyed shags, minke and humpback whales. At Neko Harbour we will have the opportunity to set foot on the Antarctic Continent in a magnificent landscape of a huge glacier and enjoy the landscape during zodiac cruises, walks and kayak excursions. A small group of glacier walkers may climb up on higher grounds of the glacier. We will spend the night at Neko or near Paradise Bay with a camp erected ashore. We will leave early morning after breaking our last camp. We sail via Melchior Islands towards the open sea of the Drake Passage. We have again a chance of seeing many seabirds.

Day 10-11: Drake Passage

Day 12: Disembark in Ushuaia

Polar Cruising

Ship Information

M/V Plancius

M/V Plancius started her life in 1976 as an oceanographic research vessel for the Royal Dutch Navy and was named "Hr. Ms. Tydeman". In June 2004, the vessel was taken out of active service as a research vessel and was purchased for refitting as a polar expedition vessel in December 2006.

The vessel was completely rebuilt as a 114-passenger vessel in 2009 and complies with the latest SOLAS-regulations (Safety Of Life At Sea), is classed by Lloyd's Register in London and flies the Dutch flag.

The vessel is comfortable and nicely decorated, but is not a luxury vessel. Our voyages in the Arctic and Antarctic regions are and will still be primarily defined by an exploratory educational travel program, spending as much time ashore as possible. This vessel will fully meet our demands to achieve this, with adequate and very comfortable accommodations.

M/V Plancius can accommodate 114 passengers in 53 passenger cabins with private toilet and shower in 4 quadruple private cabins, 40 twin private cabins (ca. 15 square meters) and 10 twin superior cabins (ca. 21 square meters).

M/v "Plancius" is manned by 17 nautical crew, 19 hotel staff (6 chefs, 1 hotel manager, 1 steward-barman and 11 stewards / cabin cleaners), 8 expedition staff (1 expedition leader and 7 guides-lecturers) and 1 doctor.
